Jodi Martin's practice focuses on labour law, human rights, and public and administrative law. She regularly acts in matters before administrative tribunals and has appeared before every level of court in Ontario and at the Supreme Court of Canada.

Jodi uses her strong interpersonal skills to bring a practical approach to the law, focusing on efficient and cost-effective solutions for her clients. She has a particular interest in appellate advocacy and has assisted union and institutional clients with judicial review applications and appeals.

Jodi acts for unions and associations in grievance and interest arbitrations, before the Ontario Human Rights Tribunal, and before the Ontario Labour Relations Board. She is frequently asked to speak at conferences and seminars on issues related to labour law, human rights, and administrative law.

Jodi is the co-lead of the firm's workplace investigation team. She provides advice and counsel in workplace investigations including advice to university investigators doing sexual assault investigations. Her investigative work was central to her role as co-counsel to the Honourable Justice Susan Lang, Independent Reviewer in the Motherisk Hair Analysis Independent Review.

Jodi is a member of the Advocates Society, the Canadian Association of Labour Lawyers, and the Toronto Lawyers Association.
